

• Is the information factual or opinion?

• Can you verify the information in print sources?

• Content Reliability/Accuracy

• Is the source of the information clearly stated?

• How valid is the research that is the source?

• Do the materials presented have substance and depth?

adding good logic?

• When arguments are given, are they based on strong evidence

• Is the author's language free from opinion and bias?

• Is the author's point of view impartial and objective?

• Is the site free of errors in spelling or grammar?

• Take all of this with a pinch of salt.

emotional language might be a useful indicator.

be expected.

• If you're looking at experts, spelling and grammar are to

• If you're researching people's feelings on a particular topic,

• The point is not to assume the absolute truth of something when it may be one person's opinion...

• but this goes for large-scale newspaper sources, too!

